

Abortion and the law in New South Wales
Research Service, Parliament of New South Wales

The debate on the availability and regulation of abortion services can at times be extremely divisive, yet surveys have found that the majority of Australians are fairly moderate in their view of how accessible the procedure should be. Whilst this paper by Talina Drabsch highlights some aspects of the current debate, it is primarily concerned with the way abortion is regulated in New South Wales, throughout the rest of Australia, and in some overseas jurisdictions. Posted 19-08-2005
